In 1850s South Carolina, ladies with ambition and a penchant for wearing trousers are rare indeed. But that's Charlotte Whitney all over. Not only does Charlie yearn to resurrect her late father's newspaper, she wants to be its editor. That position, however, has been handed to Richmond newspaperman Adam Chase. Undeterred, Charlie convinces Adam to teach her the journalism trade. In doing so, she teaches him how to open his heart. Adam Chase had one goal in mind: to return Edgemont's newspaper to its former glory and then make tracks back to the big city. But he faces one very tempting obstacle in outspoken Charlie Whitney. The newsroom becomes the battleground for a war between the sexes until Adam surrenders to Charlie's sultry charms. Together, they discover that the power of the press doesn't hold a candle to the power of love.
